ABOUT THE ARTISTS

MICHAEL D. HARRIS

displays his Waterway series exploring the visual dynamics of transforming satellite mapping data from Florida's varied water systems into three dimensional wood sculptures. Using nature as the visual starting point and incorporating a common building material (laminated plywood), he brilliantly produces work with a topographical appearance reminiscent of landscape while simultaneously conveying a sensation of movement of water itself.

TIMOTHY LEISTNER

unveils an assortment of his luminous water media paintings, both watercolors on paper and acrylics on canvas, which center on the theme of nature's cultivations. Working primarily with water media, Leistner skillfully explores the translucency and liquidity of the media to create paintings which emerge with radiance in transparency and color.
